CASE SCENARIO:

#1 Customer (owns their own home) states their refrigerator stopped working and the part needed had to be ordered from Canada. The customer lost the food contents of the refrigerator due to this incident.
 #2 All household's "dry goods" were destroyed by insects.

QUESTION:

Do these scenarios fall under the definition of "household misfortune"?

PROPOSED ANSWER:

No, these scenarios do not meet the intention of household misfortunes/disasters. The Manual Policies and Procedures does not provide a definition for household misfortunes. However, the Code of Federal Regulations (7 CFR 274.6(b)(1) states "Household misfortunes such as mass power outages and floods would qualify under this waiver." The scenarios described above are a single incident (malfunction of the refrigerator) and not due to extenuating circumstances (e.g., power outages).

FRAT RESPONSE: All members disagree with the proposed response and believe that in the absence of a specific definition that these situations do constitute household misfortune and replacement of lost food is permitted.
